Super Nutrient:

Lutein and Zeaxanthin

- The only lutein with American and European patents and produced by Kemin, a top American company.
- Small molecules, easily absorbed by the gastrointestinal tract.
- Also called macular pigments, they are accumulated in the retina, brain, skin, breast tissues, ovary, uterus and even in breast milk as well as neonatal blood.
- Can lower cataract risk, fight oxidation and neutralize free radicals that give rise to retinal damages.
- Since they cannot be produced by the body, we must rely on external supplementation. A healthy macular pigment optical density (MPOD) acts like an internal pair of sunglasses to protect the eye against Blu-ray and reduce the risk of late macular degeneration.
- Improve visual damages due to long-term usage of electronic gadgets.
